Benjamin B. Page is Professor of Philosophy at Quinnipiac University in Connecticut. He first encountered the thinking of Teilhard de Chardin in the mid-sixties in Czechoslovakia where he participated in the Christian-Marxist dialogue. Although, like many, he knew about Schweitzer and his African hospital since childhood, it was not until Quinnipiac and an Albert Schweitzer Institute affiliated that he began to learn of Schweitzer's writing. As a consequence, he and his colleague, Richard Adams, persuaded the Institute to hold a series of seminars on Schweitzer and Teilhard; since then he has regularly taught The Schweitzer Seminar at the University and has published, among others, papers on the two theologians and on the campaign against nuclear testing in which Schweitzer engaged during the last of his nine decades (earning him a thick dossier at the CIA); he uses Teilhard's Building the Earth in his introductory Philosophy classes as well as in a class called Philosophies and the Future.
